

Declaration of Religious Independence

We the People of the United States solemnly affirm our fundamental right to the free exercise of our religious faith.

This right is inalienable and granted us by our Creator and has further been guaranteed to us in paragraph two of the Declaration of Independence and by the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

We do not acknowledge the power of any branch of the government to abridge or redefine this absolute right which is enumerated solely by our own religious beliefs as instructed by our individual conscience and the teachings of our Faith.

We respect the rights of others as defined by our government only to the extent that they do not interfere with our fundamental right of religious expression.

Therefore, we call for a national "Religious Freedom Sunday" on October 4, 2015 at churches across the United States to reaffirm our inalienable right for the free exercise of our Faith independent of interference by government at any level.

May the Lord bless us in this endeavor and continue to bless the United States of America.
